OF ADMINISTRATION

"As a government lawyer assisting in Ask-a-Lawyer style services (regular sessions and case-by-case calls from a pending list) is the best way for me to plan for regular pro bono work. Though I am not taking cases to fruition as when I was in private practice, listening to someone's story and talking them through their access to justice journey can still help.

"Sometimes it has very little to do with what a specific statute says about the litigant's situation and everything to do with empowering them to tell their story in a clear way. Even better are the cases where you can point someone to a resource they didn't know about.

"I had a memorable session where a grandparent wanted advice about guardianship transitioning from a minor to an adult because of intellectual disabilities. [The client] asked Nevada Legal Services if I could set up a call. As a result, I was able to direct them to the kinship care program for monetary support for grandparents and share Supported Decision Making (NRS 162C) as a path forward for when their grandchild reached the age of majority.

"As attorneys wrangling complex work daily, we can forget just how much we can do in a limited amount of time. Don't be discouraged if life and family and work have you feeling like there is no time for pro bono. Just one call with a struggling litigant can make a difference."
